“ She was my grandmother and she had a big part of raising me when I was little. The time that I spent at her and Pawpaw Moore's house was like a golden age. I would give the world to have it again. As the firstborn son of her son, I was special to her, as was my own son, Sean. I remember her telling me when I was little that I used to cry and say to her that I didn't want Mawmaw Moore to die. I don't recall why I said that or what I was thinking at the time; but it is the truth. And I have to live with it. But she is at peace now and in a better place. My love follows after her 'West of the sunset', as I have heard it said.

“ Aunt Audrey was a great communicator and could carry a conversation with any age and always hold their interest. She had great wit and wisdom and Eddie and I as teenagers would try to put something over on her but she always seemed to be one step ahead of us. When I was seventeen I had a late night (after midnight) drag race that started on her street about two blocks south of her house. Questioning me later about that night I asked how did you know? She replied, I was sitting there watching you from my house! I thought she always went to bed early! In 1993 I went to spend an afternoon with she and Uncle Jess just prior to my move to Florida. I was telling her about how the Lord had taken such good care of me and how he had dispatched his Angels to guard over me. She replied, well son, some of us he gives good sense and to the rest he gives guardian Angels! And then she laughed and I laugh to this day when I think of that. Heaven is now a happier place because of her wit and humor and it will be with great joy that someday I will be reunited with her for all eternity!

Aunt Audrey made each conversation a visit to the past and shared all the love she felt for my father who she called her little Ray. The whole family knew her love and shared her stories with us all. Love you and have missed talking to you.
